

STYLISTIC APPROACH OF JULIAN THE EMPEROR AND GREGORY NAZIANZEAN

George Alexandropoulos
University of Athens

ABSTRACT

This study examines the rhetorical practice in both orators, Gregory Nazianzean and Julian the Emperor. Its purpose is to describe their style and explain the way of their rhetoric choices into a multidisciplinary framework.

1. INTRODUCTION

For the stylistic comparison between these two orators this study is based on three invective texts¹. Julian had written a political speech against Galileos and then Gregory the Theologian wrote in reply two invective speeches². Based on these political speeches, this study aims to define their political and rhetorical strategies combining the traditional rhetoric practice with text linguistic, computational tools. Creating a corpus³ we can have the opportunity to examine these speeches focusing on the shared, common persuasive strategies used by both orators even though they were opponents in the theological and political field. For this reason we use a variety of linguistic theories, such as Mann & Thompson Rhetorical Structure Theory (1986 1988), Searle's speech acts categorization (1969 1979 1994 1996a,b), Fairclough theories (1992 2000), Fairclough and Wodak theories (1997), van Dijk framework (1999 2001) and computational tools such as AntConc⁴. The examined corpus consists of two of Gregory's speeches (first invective: 18, 097 words, second invective: 7, 530 words) and one political speech of Julian (10, 730 words).

2. STYLISTIC CHOICES

² For more details about the content of these speeches see McGuckin (2001) and Athanassiadi (1992).

³ For more details about the corpus linguistics see Biber & Reppen (2011).

⁴ Antconc is a freeware concordancer software program.

Both Julian the emperor and Gregory the theologian resort to certain rhetoric⁵ strategies in order to persuade the public. Each one evokes all the classical rhetoric Aristotle's concepts of ethos, pathos and logos⁶.

2.1. Questions with answer

(1) Tίς γάρ οὐκ ἀνήπισεν, εἰ μή τι ἄλλο, ταῦτα τιμαῖς ποιήσειν αὐτὸν ἡμερώτερον; Τίς δὲ οὐκ ἐκ τῆς πίστεως, ἣν ἐπιστεύθη καὶ παρὰ τὸ εἰκός, δικαιότερον; ὡς ἀμφοῦ δικαίᾳ καὶ βασιλικῇ κρίσει, τοῦ μὲν ἐπιτιμηθέντος, τοῦ δὲ προβληθέντος· ὁ γάρ τὸν δεύτερον τιμήσας, οἴξει οὐκ ἀνταποδοθεῖ τοῦ προτερείου, οὐδὲ αὐτὸς ὁ τυχὼν τηῆς τιμῆς, δῆλον, ὡς οὐδὲ τὸν πρότερον ἀνενομήσει· καὶ τὸ μὲν, τηῆς ἐκείνου προπετείας ἦν, τὸ δὲ τηῆς τοῦ τετιμηκότος φιλανθρωπίας.

(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 40)

(2) Ποῦ σὺ τοῦτον ἔχεις τὸν κύκλον ἐν τοῖς σοῖς μαθήμασι; Ποῦ δὲ τὸν ἐπὶ Βηθλεὲμ δραμόντα πρότερον ἐκ τῆς ἑώρας ἀστέρα, τὸν ὄδηγὸν τῶν σῶν Μάγων καὶ πρόξενον; Ἐχω τι κάγω λέγειν ἐκ τῶν οὐρανίων· ἐκεῖνος τὴν Χριστοῦ παρουσίαν ἀνεδήλωσεν ὁ ἀστήρ· οὗτος τηῆς Χριστοῦ νίκης ὁ στέφανος.

(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 5)

(3) Νυνὶ δὲ ἐπαναληπτέον ἐστί μοι πρὸς αὐτούς· διὰ τί γάρ οὐχὶ περιτέμνεσθε (Δ); ‘Παῦλος,’ φασίν, ‘εἴπε περιτομὴν καρδίας, ἀλλ οὐχὶ τηῆς σαρκὸς δεδόσθαι πιστεύσαντι τῷ Ἀβραάμ.

(Julian Against Galileos 351a)

In the above examples Julian and Gregory use directive speech acts through their questions and their answers with representative speech acts they give certain details to the public. The reason why orators use this stylistic choice is to motivate the public or the ideological opponent making them feel that they can participate into the structure of his speech. So, in this way question leads to involvement⁷ and answer to promotion of the text producer's opinion. This rhetorical strategy reminds us of the Socratic method of inducing an agreement by leading the audience to a certain thinking process through the answer as a provided solution.

2.2. Repetition

⁵ For more details about rhetoric strategies see Borg (2007) and Johnstone (1989).

⁶ See Roberts (1984).

⁷ See Chafe (1982).

(4) Άκούσατε ταῦτα, πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, ἐνωτίσασθε πάντες οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν οἰκουμένην· καλῶ γάρ ἄπαντας, ὥσπερ ἐξ ἀπόπτου τινὸς καὶ μεσαιώτης περιωπῆς, μεγάλῳ καὶ ὑψηλῷ τῷ κηρύγματι ἀκούσατε, λαοὶ, φυλαὶ, γλῶσσαι, πᾶν γένος ἀνθρώπων, καὶ ἡλικίᾳ πᾶσα, ὅσοι τε νῦν ἔστε, καὶ ὅσοι γενήσεσθε· καὶ ἦ' ἡ μοι μεῖζον τὸ κήρυγμα, πᾶσα δύναμις τῶν οὐρανῶν, πάντες ἄγγελοι, οἵ ἔργον ἡ τοῦ τυράννου κατάλυσις, οὐ τὸν Σηάνναν καθελοῦσι τὸν βασιλέα τῶν Ἀμορραίων, οὐδὲ τὸν Ὡρ βασιλέα τῆς Βασάνης, μικροὺς δυνάστας, καὶ μικρὸν μέρος τῆς οἰκουμένης κακοῦντας τὸν Ἰσραὴλ· ἀλλὰ τὸν δράκοντα, τὸν ἀποστάτην, τὸν νοῦν τὸν μέγαν, τὸν Ἀσσύριον, τὸν κοινὸν ἀπάντων ἔχθρὸν καὶ πολέμιον, τὸν πολλὰ μὲν ἐπὶ γῆς μανέντα καὶ ἀπειλήσαντα, πολλὴν δὲ ἀδικίαν εἰς τὸ ὕψος λαλήσαντά τε καὶ μελετήσαντα.

(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 1)

(5) Λόγω τὸ σκότος ἔλυσε, λόγω τὸ φῶς ὑπεστήσατο, ἥδρασε γῆν, ἐγύρωσεν οὔρανὸν, ἀστέρας ἔταξεν, ἔσπειρεν ἀέρα, θάλασσαν ὥρισε, ποταμοὺς εἴλκυσε, ζῶα ἐψύχωσεν, ἄνθρωπον πρὸς ἔαυτὸν ἐμόρφωσε, κόσμον τοῖς ἄπαισι περιέθηκε: λόγω καὶ τὴν νῦν σκοτόμηναν λύσας, εἰς φῶς ἄπαντα καὶ τάξιν καὶ ἀρμονίαν τὴν αὔτην ἐπανήγαγεν.

(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 31)

(6) Ιᾶται Ἀσκληπιὸς ἡμῶν τὰ σώματα, παιδεύοντιν ἡμῶν αἱ Μοῦσαι σὺν Ἀσκληπιῷ καὶ Ἀπόλλωνι καὶ Ἐρμῆ λογίῳ τὰς ψυχάς, Ἄρης δὲ καὶ Ἔνω τὰ πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον συναγωνίζεται, τὰ δὲ εἰς τέχνας Ἡφαιστος ἀποκληροῦ καὶ διανέμει, ταῦτα δὲ πάντα Αθηνᾶ μετὰ τοῦ Διὸς παρθένος ἀμήτωρ πρυτανεύει. σκοπεῖτε οὖν, εἴ μή καθ' ἔκαστον τούτων ὑμῶν ἔσμεν κρείττους, λέγω δὲ τὰ περὶ τὰς τέχνας καὶ σοφίαν καὶ σύνεσιν· εἴτε γάρ τὰς πρὸς τὴν χρείαν σκοπήσειας, εἴτε τὰς τοῦ καλοῦ χάριν μιμητικάς, οἷον ἀραλματοποιητικήν, γραφικήν, ἢ οἰκονομικήν, ἱατρικήν τὴν ἐξ Ἀσκληπιοῦ, οὗ πανταχοῦ γῆς ἔστι χρηστήρια, ἃ δίδωσιν ἡμῖν ὁ θεὸς μεταλαγχάνειν διηνεκῶς.

(Julian against Galileos 235a-c)

The repetition of the above underlined lexical elements has as a main goal to give emphasis and promote the orator's opinion about an issue. In example (4) through the repetition of the lexical element (ἀκούσατε) Gregory tries to motivate the audience's thought and ensures the conditional equality⁸ between text producer and public making them feel that they can participate in the text production. In examples (5) and (6) the repetition promotes and gives emphasis to the orator's thought.

⁸ See Sornig (1989).

2.3. Appeal to authority

Both speakers incorporate in their texts intertextualistic⁹ sources in order to strengthen their argumentation. Alexandropoulos (2012) supports that Julian in Against Galileos uses the intertextualistic sources with certain functions, such as evidence, contrast and background. In the next lines some examples of intertextuality enables us to understand the way of their functions in both orators.

(7) Ταῦτα εἰδὼς καὶ ὁ θεῖος Δαβὶδ, ἐν τι τῶν ἀγαθῶν καὶ τὸ συνεστάλθαι τίθεται· καὶ χάριν ὄμολογεῖ τῷ συστείλαντι, ὡς τοῦ τὰ δικαιώματα μαθεῖ ἐντεῦθεν προσγινομένου· καὶ, "Πρὸ τοῦ με ταπεινωθῆναι", φησή, "Ἐγὼ ἐπλημμέλησα· διὰ τοῦτο τὸ λόγιόν σου ἐφύλαξα"¹⁰. μέσην πλημμελείας τε καὶ διορθώσεως τιθεὶς τὴν ταπεινωσιν, ὡς ἐκ μὲν ταύτης γεννωμένην, τὴν δὲ γεννήσασαν· ἀμαρτίᾳ μὲν γάρ ταπεινώσεως μήτηρ, ἐπιστροφῆς δὲ ταπεινωσις.
(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 32)

(8) Ταῦτα μὲν ἐκ τῶν οὐρανίων καὶ τῶν ἄνω συμπασχόντων τοῖς ἡμετέροις, κατὰ τὴν μεγάλην τοῦ παντὸς ἀρμονίαν τε καὶ οἰκείωσιν· τὰ δὲ ἔξῆς ὁ ψαλμὸς συμπληρούτω μοι· ὅτι "Καὶ πόλεις καθεῖταις" (ὡς τὰς παλαιὰς ἔκεινας ἐπὶ τοῖς αὔτοῖς ἀσεβήμασιν), ἐν αὐταῖς ταῖς καθ' ἡμᾶν παρανομίαις, τὰς μὲν πελάγεσιν ἐπικλυσθείσας, τὰς δὲ σεισμῷ κατενεχθείσας, ὡς μικροῦ καὶ τὸ λειπόμενον ἔχειν εἶπεν, ὅτι "Ἄπωλετο τὸ μνημόσυνον αὐτῶν μετ' ἥγου"¹¹ καὶ περιβοήτου τῆς ἀπωλείας· τοσαντή γάρ αὐτῶν ἡ πτῶσις, καὶ τοιοῦτο τὸ σύντριψα, καὶ τῶν ἐκ γειτόνων, καὶ μάλιστα τῇ ἀσεβείᾳ περιχαρόντων, ὡς πολλοῦ χρόνου δεῖν αὐταῖς, εἴτις ἄρα καὶ τολμήσει τοῦτο πρὸς ἐπανόρθωσιν.
(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 6)

In examples (7) and (8) Gregory Nazianzean incorporates into his speech the intertextualistic source so as to prove and support his thought. In this way the orator promotes himself as an honest and reliable personality.

(9) Ό μὲν γάρ Μωυσῆς αἰτίαν ἀποδέδωκε κομιδῇ μυθώδῃ τῆς περὶ τὰς διαλέκτους ἀνομοιότητος. ἔφη γάρ τοὺς νιόὺς τῶν ἀνθρώπων συνελθόντας πόλιν ἐθέλειν οἰκοδομεῖν καὶ πύργον ἐν αὐτῇ μέγαν, φάναι δὲ τὸν θεόν, ὅτι χρὴ κατελθεῖν καὶ τὰς διαλέκτους αὐτῶν συγχέαι. καὶ ὅπως μή τίς με νομίσῃ

⁹ For more information about intertextuality see de Beaugrande & Dressler (1981), Bakhtin (1981·1986·1993), Kristeva (1980), Riffaterre (1978·1983·1990).

¹⁰ Psalms 118, 71.

¹¹ Psalms 9,7.

ταῦτα συκοφαντεῖν, καὶ ἐκ τῶν Μωυσέως ἀναγνωσόμεθα τὰ ἔφεξῆς. ‘Καὶ εἴπον· δεῦτε, οἰκοδομήσωμεν ἐαυτοῖς πόλιν καὶ πύργον, οὗ ἔσται ἡ κεφαλὴ ἡώς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ποιήσωμεν ἐαυτοῖς ὄνομα πρὸ τοῦ διασπαρῆναι ἐπὶ προσώπου πάσης τῆς γῆς. καὶ κατέβῃ κύριος ἰδεῖν τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον, ὃν ὥκοδόμησαν οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. καὶ εἰπε κύριος· ἴδού, γένος ἔν καὶ ’ ‘χεῖλος ἔν πάντων, καὶ τοῦτο ἡρξαντο ποιῆσαι καὶ νῦν οὐκ ἐκλείψει ἀπ αὐτῶν πάντα, ὅσα ἀν ἐπίθωνται ποιεῖν. δεῦτε, καταβάντες ἐκεῖ συγχέωμεν αὐτῶν τὴν γλῶσσαν, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούωσιν ἔκαστος τῆς φωνῆς τοῦ πλησίον. καὶ διέσπειρεν αὐτοὺς κύριος ὁ θεὸς ἐπὶ πρόσωπον πάσης τῆς γῆς καὶ ἐπαύσαντο οἰκοδομοῦντες τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον.¹², εἴτα τούτοις ἀξιοῦτε πιστεύειν ἡμᾶς, ἀπιστεῖτε δὲ ὑμεῖς τοῖς ὑφ Ὄμηρου λεγομένοις ὑπὲρ τῶν Ἀλωαδῶν, ὡς ἄρα τρία ἐπ ἀλλήλοις ὅρη θεῖναι διενοοῦντο, ‘ἵν οὐρανὸς ἀμβατὸς εἴη.’

(Julian against Galileos 134d-135b)

The paraphrase (Ο μὲν γὰρ Μωυσῆς...αὐτῶν συγχέαι) is located before the quoting ('Καὶ εἶπον...καὶ τὸν πύργον'). The paraphrase operates as a background of Julian's opinion that is next revealed with direct¹³ speech so as to support and enliven Julian's speech.

In general, it could be said that both orators use the intertextualistic sources as a means to legitimize their thoughts and promote themselves. Intertextuality gives the opportunity to the orator to get involved in the speech act and simultaneously to be detached from the context, as the intertextualistic source is more emphasized. Both orators have the ability to support themselves and have a favourable effect on the public about what they say by mixing voices and genres.

2.4. Evaluative vocatives

(10) Πόθεν οὖν ἐπῆλθε σοι τοῦτο, ὦ κουφότατε πάντων καὶ ἀπληστότατε, τὸ λόγων ἀποστερῆσαι Χριστιανούς;

(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 101)

(11) Τοῦτό τοι ἀντὶ ποδὸς ξεινήιον, ὦ λῶστε καὶ συνετώτατε, ἵνα σε προσείπω τοῖς σοῖς· ταῦτα οἱ τῶν λόγων ἀποκλεισθέντες ἡμεῖς, κατὰ τὴν μεγάλην καὶ θαυμαστήν σου νομοθεσίαν.

(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 39)

¹² Genesis 11. 4 – 8.

¹³ For more functions about the use of direct speech see Mayes (1990), Holt (1996 2000).

(12) ἐκ μὲν γὰρ ἔκεινης, καθὰ καὶ ὁ Παῦλος λέγει, βλάπτεται μὲν οὐδὲν ὁ προσφερόμενος, ἡ δὲ συνείδησις τοῦ βλέποντος ἀδελφοῦ σκανδαλισθείη ἃν καθ ὑμᾶς, ὡς σοφώτατοι καὶ ὑπερήφανοι.

(Julian against Galileos 229cd)

In general the audience is forced to take part in the text production through vocatives. Besides this, in the above examples the superlative degree adjectives give an evaluative character to these vocatives, as they evaluate the political opponent with a dose of irony.

2.5. Use of the personal Pronoun

It is noted that both orators use the personal pronoun ἔγώ before different verbs in order to state their opinion and express their intention. In Gregory's first speech the personal pronoun ἔγώ is followed by these verbs διαλέξομαι for commissive speech act and οἶδα for representative speech acts. In Gregory's second speech the personal pronoun is combined with these verbs: ἔξηγήσομαι, καταλύσω, οἶδα either in commissive speech acts or in representative as a means for the producer of the text to express his opinion. In his speech Against Galileos Julian combines with the below verbs: νενόμικα, μακρολογῶ, ἐντέλλομαι, φαίνω ἄν, ὑπερασπίζω σου, παραδώσω (16 N of occurrences), which are included either in representative or commissive speech acts. In addition, it is also worth mentioning that both orators use mostly verbs, such as οἶδα, οἶμαι with or without subject, since it is incorporated in the suffix in Greek. These verbs give them the opportunity to express his ideas, opinion and the knowledge they have about an issue because of their character.

Table 1. Frequency of private verbs οἶμαι and οἶδα

Private Verbs	Gregory First Speech	Gregory Second Speech	Julian Against Galileos
οἶμαι	R ¹⁴ 284, F ¹⁵ 6	R 448, F 2	R 127 F 11
οἶδα	R 169, F 10	R 259, F 6	R 440 F 3

Based on the above table we understand that Gregory prefers to use more than Julian the verb οἶδα (16 times in total). It must be said that this verb is mostly (14 times from 16) in negative form (οὐκ οἶδα) and is accompanied by a clause. Through the negative forms the text producer expresses his opinion for the content of this clause and reveals his doubt about the truth of this clause. In two other cases, this verb is accompanied by adverbs such as εὖτε as an indicator for displaying text's producer deep knowledge of what he says. Instead of Gregory, Julian through οἶμαι promotes himself as a modest personality. In most cases the verb οἶμαι is used by both orators in a parenthetical way, as an attempt to express their opinion kindly and modestly.

¹⁴ R means Rank.

¹⁵ F means Frequency.

Moreover, it is necessary to define the usage of the personal pronouns by both orators. For this reason the following table (3) lists the uses of the first and second personal pronouns by both orators.

Pronouns	Gregory First Speech	Gregory Second Speech	Total Amount in Gregory's Speeches	Julian Against Galileos
1st person sg reference ἐγώ	6	6	12	6

ὑμᾶς	3	1	4	13
Total amount	22	4	26	32
Total of all 1st and 2nd personal pronoun	182	73	255	176

Based on the above table it is seen that Gregory generally uses more frequently the 1st and 2nd personal pronouns than Julian does. It is worth mentioning that the first personal pronoun (ἐγώ) in singular is used with the same frequency (6 times) by both speakers in each of their speeches. The same thing happens with these types: σοι, σοι, ἡμεῖς, ἡμῶν, ἡμᾶν, ἡμᾶς, ὑμῶν, ὑμᾶν between Gregory's first speech and Julian's. In this way we could say that both orators, even though they differ in their political and theological orientation, they try through their speeches either to involve into the content of their text not only themselves but also the audience, or to be detached from the audience so as to express their ideas and thoughts. Last but not least, it is noted that Gregory in his second speech reduces the use of the personal pronouns in all cases except for the nominative of the first personal pronoun (ἐγώ) as a strategy of his communicative goal.

2.6. Impersonal syntax

(13) Καὶ τοῦτο δῆλον ἐξ ὧν βραχὺ μὲν παρ' αὔτῷ τὸ τῆς πειθοῦς, πλεῖον δὲ τὸ τῆς βίας εὐθὺς ἐπόμενον ἦν· ἵν', ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς θήραις, ἢ ταῖς πάγαις ἀλῶμεν, ἢ τοῖς διώγμασι, καὶ εἰς γε τρόπος πάντως ἡμᾶς χειρώσηται.

(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 63)

(14) Ἀξιον δὲ μηδὲ τοῦτο παραδραμεῖν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς, μεγίστην τῆς ἐκείνου κακοδαιμονίας ἐπὶ πολλοῖς ἔχον ἀπόδειξιν.

(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 14)

(15) Μικρὸν δὲ ἀναλαβεῖν ἄξιον, ὅθεν ἡμῖν ἥκει καὶ ὅπως ἔννοια θεοῦ τὸ πρῶτον, εἴτα παραθεῖναι τὰ παρὰ τοῖς Ἕλλησι καὶ παρὰ τοῖς Ἐβραίοις ὑπὲρ τοῦ θείου λεγόμενα, καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο ἐπανερέσθαι τούς οὕτε Ἑλληνας οὕτε Ἰουδαίους, ἀλλὰ τῆς Γαλιλαίων ὅντας αἱρέσεως, ἀνθ' ὅτου πρὸ τῶν ἡμετέρων εἶλοντο τὰ παρ' ἐκείνοις [...] φαῦλον δὲ καὶ ἐπισευρυμένον βίον ἐκ τῆς παρ' ἡμῖν ḥραθυμίας καὶ χυδαιότητος, τοῦτο τὴν ἀρίστην θεοσέβειαν ἡθέλησαν ὀνομάζεσθαι.

(Julian against Galileos 42e-43b)

In all the above examples both orators use impersonal syntax either with representative speech acts, so as to legitimize and give emphasis on their thought, or directive speech acts (μικρὸν δὲ ἀναλαβεῖν ἄξιον) that give a more evaluative character to the message because of their deontic modality.

2.7. Contrast and antithesis¹⁶

(16) Taῦτα οὐσέβεις (S), ἀλλ' ἀτιμάζεις (N)...
(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 70)

(17) Γελῶσον τὸν Πᾶνα, καὶ τὸν Πρίαπον, καὶ τὸν Ἐρμαφρόδιτον, καὶ τοὺς ὑπὸ μανίας περικεκομένους ἢ διεσπασμένους θεούς (S). Ἀλλὰ ταῦτα μὲν τῇ σκηνῇ παρήσω, καὶ τοὺς κοσμοῦσιν αὗτοὺς ποιηταῖς· ἐγὼ δὲ εἰς παραίνεσίν τινα καταλύσω τὸν λόγον (N).

(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 32)

(18) Ὅτι δέ οὐχ Ἑβραίων μόνον ἔμέλησε τῷ θεῷ, πάντων δέ ἔθνῶν κηδόμενος ἔδωκεν ἔκείνοις μὲν οὔδεν σπουδαῖον ἢ μέρα (N), ἡμῖν δὲ μακρῷ κρείττονα καὶ διαφέροντα, σκοπεῖτε λοιπὸν τὸ ἔντεῦθεν (N).

(Julian against Galileos 176ab)

In the above examples both orators try to persuade through the rhetorical relation of contrast and antithesis. In example (16) the antithesis is ensured through the syntactic schema oὐ... ἀλλ'; the main message of this structure is revealed in the nucleus of this sentence (ἀλλ' ἀτιμάζεις), as Julian is disapproved of his impiety. The disapproval operates as a means for Gregory's praise. In the same way example (17) contributes to the text's producer's goal as he states that he will give an encouraging character to his speech and will stop any kind of disapproval and ridicule.

In example (18) the metalinguistic expression σκοπεῖτε λοιπὸν τὸ ἔντεῦθεν gives the opportunity to Julian to invoke the audience attention as a directive speech act. Besides this, the antithetical conjunction (οὐχ μόνον-δέ) and the antithetic pair (ἔκείνοις μὲν-ἡμῖν δέ) contribute to the contradiction of two theological systems. The orator leads the public to make this certain comparison through the relation of contrast, as he wants to give emphasis on the negative characteristics of the empire with reference the theological system that must change. If these characteristics change, then his political goal for improvement and elaboration will be achieved. To sum up, in all the examples the rhetorical relations of antithesis and contrast promote the text producer and enable him to have a favourable effect on the public.

2.8. Lexical similarities

For the purposes of this analysis at this point follows table 2 with the most frequently used words in order to draw some conclusions about the vocabulary used by orators examined.

¹⁶ For more information about coherence see de Beaugrande & Dressler (1981), Mann & Thompson (1986-1988), Hoey (1993) and Winter (1977).

Table 2. The most frequent content words in both orators

Gregory Nazianzean Word Frequency	Julian Word Frequency
Λόγος 85	Θεός 213
Θεός 65	Μωσῆς 50
ἀσέβεια 38	ἄνθρωπος 48
Χριστιανός 38	Λόγος 34
εὐσέβεια 23	Κύριος 18
Χριστός 16	Ψυχή 15
ψυχή 15	Ἰουδαίοι 12
βασιλεύς 14	οἶμαι 11
ἀλήθεια 13	μᾶλλον 12
βασιλεία 13	Χριστός 8

Even though they are two personalities with different political and theological thoughts and beliefs they use a basic, core vocabulary that gives them the opportunity to express their ideas about their theological system. It seems that these words have a moral content and reflect the importance of certain concepts for the policies of these two orators. These words also reflect the theological system of that period which was based on piety before the Gods.

2.9. Appeal to logic

(19) Τοῦ δὲ ἡ πονηρία τοῖς λογισμοῖς ἐπεσκότισε (S). καὶ διὰ τοῦτο μικροῖς τε ὅμιοις καὶ μείζοις πλέκει τὸν διωγμόν (N).

(Gregory Nazianzean's First Invective against Julian the Emperor 75)

(20) Ἄξιον δὲ μηδὲ τοῦτο παραδραμεῖν τοῦ ἀνδρὸς, μεγίστην τῆς ἔκεινου κακοδαιμονίας ἐπὶ πολλοῖς ἔχον ἀπόδειξιν (N). "Ἐκείτο μὲν ἐπὶ τῇ ὄχθῃ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, καὶ πονηρῶς εἴχε τοῦ τραύματος· πολλοὺς δὲ εἰδώς τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ δόξης ἡξιωμένων, ὡς ἂν ὑπὲρ ἄνθρωπον νομισθεῖεν, τέχναις τισὸν ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἀφανισθέντας, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο θεοὺς νομισθέντας ἔρωτι τῆς αὐτῆς δόξης ἔαλωκώς, καὶ ἄμα τῷ τρόπῳ τῆς τελευτῆς διὰ τὸ τῆς ἀβουλίας ἄδοξον αἰσχυνόμενος, τί μηχανᾶται, καὶ τί ποιεῖ; οὐδὲ γάρ τῷ βίῳ συναναλίσκεται πονηρία· ρίψαι κατὰ τοῦ ποταμοῦ πειρᾶται τὸ σῶμα, καὶ πρὸς τοῦτο ἔχρητό τισι τῶν πιστῶν ἔαυτοῦ συνεργοῖς καὶ μύσταις τῶν ἀποβρήτων. Καὶ εἰ μὴ τῶν βασιλικῶν εὔνοούχων τις, τὸ πρᾶγμα αἰσθόμενος, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις καταμηνύσας, μίσει τοῦ κακουργήματος τὴν ὄρμὴν διεκώλυσε, καὶ ἐφάνη τις ἄλλος τοῖς ἀνοήτοις θεὸς νέος ἐξ ἀτυχήματος. Ἀλλ᾽ ἔκεινος οὕτω μὲν βασιλεύσας, οὕτω δὲ στρατηγήσας, οὕτω καὶ καταλύει τὸν βίον (S).

(Gregory Nazianzean's Second Invective against Julian the Emperor 14)

(21) Καλῶς ἔχειν ἔμοιγε φαίνεται τὰς αἰτίας ἐκθέσθαι πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις, ύφ’ ὃν ἐπείσθην ὅτι τῶν Γαλιλαίων ἡ σκευωρία πλάσμα ἔστιν ἀνθρώπων ὑπὸ κακουργίας συντεθέν (N). ἔχουσα μὲν οὐδέν θεῖον, ἀποχρησαμένη δὲ τῷ φιλομύθῳ καὶ παιδαριώδει καὶ ἀνοήτῳ τῆς ψυχῆς μορίῳ, τὴν τερατολογίαν εἰς πίστιν ἤγαγεν ἀληθείας (S).

(Julian against Galileos 39ab)

Both orators resort to argumentative rhetorical relations as part of a logical organization pattern. In example (19) through the rhetorical relation of cause Gregory tries to explain the Julian's behavior against Christians. In example (20) through the rhetorical relation of evidence he tries to prove Julian's misfortune. Through the relation of evidence in example (21) Julian tries to prove that Christianity uses myths as a means in order to deceive people. To crown it all, both orators try through the argumentative relations (cause, evidence) and their text organization to persuade and explain to the public everything they talk about.

3. CONCLUSION

Through the above multidisciplinary analysis it is fully understood that Julian and Gregory Nazianzean use some rhetorical strategies that promote their rhetorical and communicative goals. Most of the certain ideological strategies are used in the same way aiming at catching the attention and maintaining the interest of their audience. This does not mean that both orators do not have their personal style, but it means that their ideological and political goal leads them to prefer certain strategies so as to have a favourable effect on public. In this way, no one can deny that orators rely on political holistic characteristics and systematic rhetorical mechanisms in order to persuade.
